

The Value of Science in a Polarized Age

Arthur Lupia, PhD

Assistant Director, National Science Foundation
Head, Social, Behavioral and Economic Sciences Directorate

Join Dr. Lupia to learn more about the value of science, and the social sciences in particular, in addressing contemporary challenges facing our nation, especially in an era of polarized politics. Dr. Lupia will also touch on funding strategies the NSF is using to create new opportunities in challenging circumstances.

Participate in-person at the Virginia Tech Research Center, East/West Falls Church Room, 900 N. Glebe Rd., Arlington, or through a simultaneously linked viewing in Blacksburg in the ISCE Conference Room.
